"Mr. Tekuisky left the store less than minute ago," he said. "If you run you mill catch him."

Hale at once made for the door, but, hinking a trick was about to be played in him, as on former occasions, he urned, presumably to serve Burrows with a subpoena, but to his amazement he latter had disappeared. The monent the lawyer's back was turned, the sartender pulled up a trap-door directly inder his feet behind the counter, and irropped into the cellar.

An hour later Hale and Tekuisky met again in Centre street. The latter was talking to three men when the lawyer walked up and asked him where Tekuisky was. The latter pointed to one of his friends, who was promptly served with a subpoena.

"At last, Mr. Tekuisky. I have got you," c-led the lawyer, after giving the paper to the wrong man. Then, as every body tried to hide their laughter, he hurried away.

Mr. Hale told an "Evening World" reporter that District-Attorney Fellows had promised to help him.

"I am greatly indebted to him for the assistance he has given me in serving my subpoenas," he said.

Lawyer Hale saw Col. Fellows at 3.15 o'clock and showed him the proofs he had to substantiate his charges. The proof consisted mainly of newspaper cippings and transcripts of testimony already taken.

Col. Fellows decided to appear either personally or by one of his assistants in the General Term of the Common Pleas Court at 4 o'clock, where the hearing of the charges against Divver will be continued.

At the last election the stockholders gave their heary support to the Harris ticket, believing that the men they selected would act as trustees for the stockholders. In favoring a plan of reorganization which seeks to deprive the stock of its vote, the trustees have not acted in good faith, hence the demand for a change. I believe that no plan which contemplates the annulment of the stock-voting privileges will be successful, the only real value attached to a non-dividend stock is its power once a year to elect a Board of Trustees. Michael Hanley, a junkman at 133 Baxter street, but he didn't know it at the start, and he was sorry he owned it before the show was half finished.

Hanley buys waste paper from a Sixth avenue firm. This morning he had thirty sacks, or 2,361 pounds, on his newly painted truck and started downtown. All went well until he struck Third street, where a crowd of boystried to climb aboard.

Hanley drove them off, but they followed, he says, and threw firecrackers at his client, Mrs. Annie J. Mahoney, of 416 Kosciusko street. Brooklyn, to enable her to defend her action for separation against her husband, John Mahoney. This Mahoney is a newspaper man, Your Honor, said Mr. Clarey, "and has made from $50 to $100 a week."

"I do, Your Honor," said a long man with red whiskers. "Mrs. Mahoney has lived in my house eight years. I don't understand this application. I know nothing about it."

There he was surprised to see every-body looking out of the windows and yelling like mad. Hanley hadn't expected this ovation and couldn't account for it until he turned his head and he was horrified to see his property fast going up in flames and smoke.

He unhitched his horse, and with his hatch tried to extinguish the flames. The streets was full of people, but none lifted a hand in the old man's aid. Not until his mustache and eyebraws were maked to the countrie lot. The rest of the paper was kicked, blazing, about the streets by his tormentors, until some one ran to the engine house in Great Jones street.
